EPA Leaves Door Open To Address Methylene Chloride's Workplace Risks

Facing widespread criticism that its first-time ban on consumer uses of paint strippers containing methylene chloride does not protect workers, the agency's top toxics official is leaving the door open to taking future action to limit workplace risks under the revised toxics law though she stopped short of pledging to ban the chemical's commercial uses that many critics are seeking.

As EPA, DOD Battle, New Jersey Adopts Strict Groundwater PFAS Level

New Jersey regulators have set strict health-based groundwater cleanup standards for two common per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS), adopting interim levels that are forty times more stringent than those being pushed by the Defense Department (DOD) in an ongoing fight with EPA over federal cleanup levels.

Reorganization Seeks To 'Rightsize' ORD After Years Of Declining Resources

EPA's planned reorganization of its Office of Research and Development (ORD) represents the natural outcome of the decades-long decline in the office's funding and personnel levels -- a situation that President Donald Trump's fiscal year 2020 budget request will accelerate by proposing further cuts to EPA research, sources say.
